Community Development & Participatory Storytelling Digital Arts Project

(Project Runs June 3rd - September 1st, Registrations until June 17th)

Are you looking for a meaningful time to participate in exploring and making sense of our collective experience during these "Covid" quarantine?

In the past two months the world has experienced a shift in pace which has left many of us wondering about our relationship to work, to the economy, our relationship to technology, and our understanding of globalization and its impact on our lives.

Most important we have felt in one way or the other a sense of something happening within. A new form of awareness, as we were snapped out of our routines, of our daily hustle at work, as we found ourselves at home not sure of what to do next...

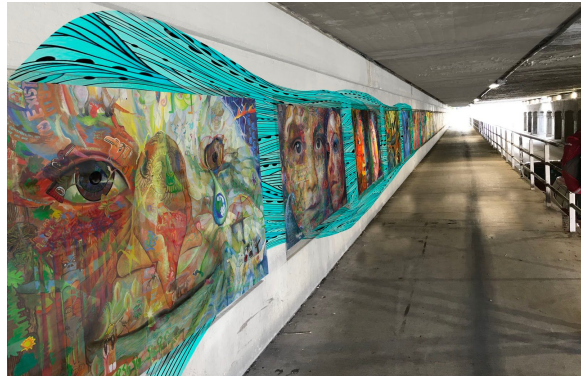

The Richmond Underpass Community Storytelling mural project initially planned to be a series of facilitated group workshops involving multiple community groups has now shifted to a digital visual-storytelling platform exploring the stories emerging collectively for all of us in these times of global uncertainty.

(Initial draft of how the project could potentially look like)

The Project: We are looking for 60-100 participants to take a 13 weeks visual-storytelling journey in the co-creation of a story archive which will culminate in the production of 10 to 13 digital mural paintings which will be printed and installed in the Richmond Underpass between Horton and York. The idea of painting a background is still on.

During the 13 weeks you will be given a series of storytelling activities, resources, workshops, "homeworks", prompts and platforms to explore your story and the story emerging in your community during this quarantine.

To be eligible to participate:

- Be able to commit to the 13 weeks and submit all the storytelling activities. Each week you are given storytelling activities you can complete in at least 30 mins to 1hr.
- Be willing to participate fully and openly in personal storytelling (no experience in storytelling required).
- Be respectful to yourself and others embracing with openness other peoples experiences, ethnic backgrounds and stories.
